FACULTY POSITIONS AND RELEVANT APPOINTMENTS

ARKANSAS STATE UNIVERSITY

Director of the Campus Writing Program (CWP) and Composition, 2013-present

Narrative: As the Director of Campus Writing, I oversee Composition (first-year writing), Writing Studies (upper-level writing), and WAC/WID. My daily duties include: offering support, resources, and training to CWP faculty, including concurrent, and across campus; advising for the Writing Studies Minor; hiring, training, mentoring, and scheduling Teaching Assistants and writing faculty and managing enrollment for Composition and Writing Studies course offerings; developing, implementing, and reporting on Composition Assessment and consulting on writing assessment across campus; chairing the Composition Committee and the Writing Studies Committee; creating short-term and long-term program goals and writing our annual strategic plan; developing and following up on faculty improvement plans; observing faculty and T.A.s; arbitrating grade and plagiarism disputes for Composition and Writing Studies faculty and students; coordinating internships for the Writing Studies Minor; maintaining the Writing Studies and Composition websites; overseeing textbook orders for Composition offerings; representing the Writing Program on department, college, and university committees; planning pertinent outreach and events; obtaining and/or allocating funds for and coordinating writing faculty members' travel to professional conference; and corresponding with faculty, staff, and students on behalf of the Writing Program.

Director of the Writing Center, 2013-present

Narrative: As Director of the Writing Center, my duties include: hiring, training, observing, evaluating, scheduling, overseeing, and mentoring an average of 12 graduate tutors each semester, including summer terms; maintaining the Writing Center's budget and website and keeping up with supply orders; completing ESFs, key forms, employment verifications, and employment termination workflows, adding employees to and keeping up with TimeTracker (time requests, leave requests, etc.); working with University College and the Director of the Learning Commons to hire and supervise the Learning Commons'/Writing Center administrative staff; creating and implementing policies in the Writing Center; developing, recording, and communicating assessment measures; coordinating the Writing Center's presence at campus events, such as the Gathering on the Green and Organization Fair; working with faculty and staff across campus to provide training, resources, and presentations on writing and writing pedagogy; coordinating, on average, 50 informational classroom visits at the start of every semester; representing the Writing Center on university committees; planning literacy-themed events, such as the National Day on Writing, Tutor Appreciation Day, and the Up-All-Night-Write-In; and corresponding with faculty, staff, and students on behalf of the Writing Center.

Assistant Professor of Rhetoric, Composition, and Writing Studies and Creative Writing, 2013-present

Narrative: I currently have approximately a half-time teaching load, which consists of the two-credit T.A. Preceptorship in Teaching Composition, the one-credit Preceptorship in Writing Center Studies, and other courses. I consistently teach Seminar in Composition Theory, Composition I and II, and Advanced Creative Writing. Other courses I have taught include Practical Writing, Advanced Composition, and this spring's team-taught course "Who Tells Your Story: Race, Rhetoric, and the Revolution," centered around the hit musical, Hamilton. As an Assistant Professor, I also serve on undergraduate honors and graduate thesis and exam committees, develop, proctor, and evaluate graduate comprehensive exams, and serve on many department, college, and university committees.

Faculty Fellow, Creative Commons, 2016-2017.

Narrative: In my capacity as the first Faculty Fellow for Creative Commons, I helped create the mechanisms by which the Creative Commons Faculty Advisory Board encourages, supports, and recognizes innovative curricular and co-curricular work that is interdisciplinary, experiential-based, and demonstrates service-minded thinking.
