Conducting Colloquium

The Eighth Annual A-State Conducting Colloquium

Arkansas State University is pleased to announce the eighth A-State Conducting Colloquium on November 12-14, 2015. The featured clinician for the colloquium is Rodney Dorsey, director of bands at the University of Oregon. Additional colloquium clinicians will include Timothy Oliver, director of bands and coordinator of Wind and Percussion Studies at Arkansas State University and Sarah Labovitz, associate director of bands at Arkansas State University.

The A-State Conducting Colloquium will provide you the opportunity to refresh your conducting skills and offer you ideas you can apply and share with your ensemble. These may include score analysis, rehearsal techniques and quality repertoire for junior and senior high school bands.

Individuals may participate in one of two ways. As a conducting participant, you will conduct the A-State Wind Ensemble three times and receive positive, immediate feedback, as well as a DVD of all conducting sessions and comments. Enrollment is limited to 12 conducting participants. As an observer participant, you will attend all sessions and may elect to play as a guest member of the A-State Wind Ensemble. Enrollment is unlimited for observer participants.

The A-State Conducting Colloquium provides a nurturing, non-competitive, learning environment that offers both the beginning and experienced music educator an opportunity for musical growth and professional development.

Registration Form

To register for the A-State Conducting Colloquium, please complete the following information and return it with your Colloquium Registration Fees.

Space is limited to 12 Conducting Participants with assignments based on the order of received registration and fees, so don't delay!
