HOW WE CHANGED:

As ASU moves into calendar year 2012 and beyond in meeting fully its mission, goals, and objectives, there are a number of important areas that warrant special emphasis. Perhaps paramount among these is the thoughtful preparation of the ASU self-study for The Higher Learning Commission (HLC) of the North Central Association of Colleges and Schools and a variety of plans that are necessary to provide a shared vision for and direction to the future of the university. These plans will serve as a heuristic to guide individual and collective behavior. Among other things, it is of critical importance that even greater efforts are made to improve the overall culture of assessment at ASU. Currently, there are some colleges and departments in which assessment is particularly well established and documented (especially where specialized accreditation is present), whereas in others, formal assessment, informed improvements, and associated documentation is less advanced and warrants special attention and positive action.

WHAT WE GOT:

Changes are still being made.
